Q. 10. Write short notes on the following:

(a) Sufism

Ans. Sufism is concerned with mystical tendencies within Islam. It aims at achieving direct communion with God. No doubt the sufis has faith in the Shariat. But they did not confine their religious practice to formal adherence. According to this system one must be guided by a spiritual person popularly known as Shaikh, Pir or Murshid in order to have the spiritual experience with God. In fact, the sufi disciples called murid have to pass through the series of stages to establish communication with God.

We find that within sufism a number of orders called silsilahs are found in and outside India. They maintain some unique features also. The khanqahs are the centre of sufi activities. The murids receive spiritual training by the pir in them. In fact, the popularity of the khanqahs is the popularity of pirs. We would like to mention some of the well known silsilahs during the medieval period as the Suhrawardi, Chishti, Qadri and Shattaris. Undoubtedly, except the Suhrawardi silsilahs, the rest had flourished in the North India as well as in the Deccan region. With the help of impassioned musical recital the sufis used to organize a mystical state of ecstasy. The sufism had made in road into the sub-continent from central Asia with the foundation of the Delhi Sultanate. The, sufis had also migrated into the country due to the fear of Mongol invasion.

SOCIOLOGY OF RELIGION

DEFINITIONS AND APPROACHES

Religion - Sociological Perspectives

INTRODUCTION

Religion is one of the most powerful and influential force which helps in shaping the relationship of human beings with each other. The concept of sociology has emerged lately in the first half of the nineteenth century. Sociologists are working hard to study the concept of religion mainly for two reasons. First, it is of great importance to many people as it directly or indirectly affects an individual's life. People's actions are governed by the way they practice religion. Secondly, religion leaves an influential impact on the society. Therefore it becomes essential to study the interdependence of the society and the religion. The sociology of the religion covers the conflicts and cooperation generated out of practice of the religion in the society. Various sociologists have worked towards understanding the larger society through examining religion and its influence. India is a country where multiplicity of religion is followed and therefore the scope of the study of religion is vast, but other countries provide their contribution to make this study successful. Different theories have been developed to understand the interdependence of the society and the religion.

CHAPTER AT A GLANCE

THE SCOPE OF RELIGION

Religion is a significant aspect of social life, and the social dimension is an important part of religion. Religion is practiced both in the literate and illiterate society. Different modes of practicing religion include hymns and poetic expressions, which was followed mainly to make it more attractive and easy to remember. Different languages, gestures and idioms are used to celebrate various aspects of religion. References were made from nature like sun, moon, and fire and from different animals like crow, eagle, snake, lion, deer, etc. to make connections with religion. Also river like Ganga and hills and mountains like Kailsah Parvat became a part of this tradition. As mentioned earlier, to make religion more attractive and easy to remember, different songs and stories were developed to make people understand the difference between good and evil and gentleness and cruelty. Stories and chapters of religion are described in various forms in the schools so that the concept of religion and the ways of practicing it can be passed on from one generation to another.

Numbers of institutions are working hard to develop different languages, styles and expressions to pass on the concept of religion. Therefore this group solidarity and the participation of society in collective activities are helping a lot to the sociologists to understand the relation of the society and the religion.

PROCESS OF KNOWLEDGE

With the increasing division of labour and specialisation, the process of knowledge also developed Religion, its teachings and practices have become a specialised activity. Scientific development led to the growth of the study of religion. The thrust for knowledge of religion led the man discover the new sources of knowledge beyond the original ones like seminars and institutions. Scientific growth got a fresh start with a series of discoveries by various scientists. Assertion of ideas and growth of specialisation and religious theories encompassed knowledge.

STUDY OF TOTEMS

An important strand of classical sociology of religion has a prophetic ring. Number of theorists made their contribution in sociology of religion as a part of the larger examination of the nature of modern society. One of the theorists, Emile Durkheim observed that a tribal group of Australia was relating the religion to the spirits of plants and animals. This group was totemic in nature i.e. they were respecting the totem animal and were organising functions in its honour by painting their faces and bodies, by dancing and by celebrating a public function in their honour.

The belief in the common totem brought a sense of belonging in the group. Durkheim observed solidarity in the group and could smell an essence a religion in the group. The belief in the religion was simple and pure amongst the group. After all these observations Durkheim concluded that it is not necessary to have God as an important element of religion. Durkheim said that religion was the soul of the society. With the development in science, number of schools and universities opened up to understand the scope of religion.

A totem is a stipulated ancestor of a group of people, such as a family, clan, lineage, or tribe.

Totems support larger groups than the individual person. In kinship and descent, if the apical ancestor of a clan is non-human, it is called a totem. Normally this belief is accompanied by a totemic myth.

In modern times, some single individuals, not otherwise involved in the practice of a tribal religion, have chosen to adopt a personal spirit animal helper, which has special meaning to them, and may refer to this as a totem. This non-traditional usage of the term is prevalent in the New Age movement, and the mytho poetic men's movement.

THE SECULAR APPROACHES

In Germany, people started getting converted into Christianity. Some scholars like Max Weber, Karl Marx and Durkheim also belong to that category. Because of some personal reasons, Durkheim moved to Paris and did not practice any faith. The faith on religion became more significant to him. The defeat of France in the war led to the end of rule of Napoleon-II and the establishment of the third republic in France which was against the interests of the group of monarch, their families, the nobility and the Church. The secular aspect of education was then improved by Durkheim who took over as professor of education and trained qualified teachers and promoted scientific studies of social phenomena.

Another writer, Merton focused on the life of tribal people as their practices appeared non-rational. He also worked upon finding the functional alternatives for religion and on some aspects of communism.

Some disputes about religion occurred in the society and the resolution of these disputes helped in achieving the common goals of the society and this in turn helped in organising the economy of the society and making best use of the natural resources. Many other writers also worked towards finding the relation of religion with economy, polity and legal arrangements.

ECONOMY AND RELIGION

Economy and Religion are interrelated in the following two ways:

- When a person gets connected with the material welfare, it leads to lack of interest in the matters that the religion seem to promote. Religion in that case act as a hinderance to the path of growth. In some religions like Islam, the idea of making gifts forbids taking interests on loan but allows profit sharing. These ideas are not conducive to the growth of capital and its results.
- Second view states that when a man gets connected with the religion, it encourages a man to work harder, earn more money, work for a longer duration, save the earned money and convert it into capital. Therefore the hard earned money provide the pleasures in this world and this life itself.

During the 19th century the protestants experimented in the field of Technology and science and Catholics were satisfied in the field of humanities and art. According to Max Weber such attitudes paved the way towards development.

THE RISE OF CAPITALISM

Some famous economists like Marx and Weber focused on the rise of capitalism. Marx made a distinction between the basic structure and super structure of society. According to Marx, religion is not responsible for guiding rational human activity, whereas according to Max Weber, human efforts in the rational organisation of economy are mainly governed by a particular form of religion.

The word capitalism is now quite commonly used to describe the social system in which we now live. It is also often assumed that it has existed, if not forever, then for most of human history. In fact, capitalism is a relatively new social system.

But what exactly does 'capitalism' mean?

Class division

Capitalism is the social system which now exists in all countries of the world. Under this system, the means for producing and distributing goods (the land, factories, technology, transport system etc.) are owned by a small minority of people. We refer to this group of people as the capitalist class. The majority of people must sell their ability to work in return for a wage or salary (who we refer to as the working class).

The working class are paid to produce goods and services which are then sold for a profit. The profit is gained by the capitalist class because they can make more money selling what we have produced than we cost to buy on the labour market. In this sense, the working class are exploited by the capitalist class. The capitalists live off the profits they obtain from exploiting the working class whilst reinvesting some of their profits for the further accumulation of wealth.

This is what we mean when we say there are two classes in society. It is a claim based upon simple facts about the society we live in today. This class division is the essential feature of capitalism. It may be popular to talk (usually vaguely) about various other 'classes' existing such as the 'middle class', but it is the two classes defined here that are the key to understanding capitalism.

It may not be exactly clear which class some relatively wealthy people are in. But there is no ambiguity about the status of the vast majority of the world's population. Members of the capitalist class certainly know who they are. And most members of the working class know that they need to work for a wage or salary in order to earn a living (or are dependent upon somebody who does, or depend on state benefits).

The profit motive

In capitalism, the motive for producing goods and services is to sell them for a profit, not to satisfy people's needs. The products of capitalist production have to find a buyer, of course, but this is only incidental to the main aim of making a profit, of ending up with more money than was originally invested. This is not a theory that we have thought up but a fact you can easily confirm for yourself by reading the financial press. Production is started not by what consumers are prepared to pay for to satisfy their needs but by what the capitalists calculate can be sold at a profit. Those goods may satisfy human needs but those needs will not be met if people do not have sufficient money.

The profit motive is not just the result of greed on behalf of individual capitalists. They do not have a choice about it. The need to make a profit is imposed on capitalists as a condition for not losing their investments and their position as capitalists. Competition with other capitalists forces them to reinvest as much of their profits as they can afford to keep their means and methods of production up to date.

As you will see, we hold that it is the class division and profit motive of capitalism that is at the root of most of the world's problems today, from starvation to war, to alienation and crime. Every aspect of our lives is subordinated to the worst excesses of the drive to make profit. In capitalist society, our real needs will only ever come a poor second to the requirements of profit.

It is widely assumed that capitalism means a free market economy. But it is possible to have capitalism without a free market. The systems that existed in the U.S.S.R. and exist in China and Cuba demonstrate this. These class-divided societies are widely called 'socialist'. A cursory glance at what in fact existed there reveals that these countries were simply 'state capitalist'. In supposedly 'socialist' Russia, for example, there still existed wage slavery, commodity production, buying, selling and exchange, with production only taking place when it was viable to do so. 'Socialist' Russia continued to trade according to the dictates of international capital and, like every other capitalist, state, was prepared to go to war to defend its economic interests. The role of the Soviet state became simply to act as the functionary of capital in the exploitation of wage labour, setting targets for production and largely controlling what could or could not be produced. We therefore feel justified in asserting that such countries had nothing to do with socialism as we define it. In fact, socialism as we define it could not exist in one country alone-like capitalism it must be a global system of society.

It is also possible (at least in theory) to have a free market economy that is not capitalist. Such a 'market economy' would involve farmers, artisans and shopkeepers each producing a particular product that they would exchange via the medium of money. There would be no profit-making and no class division-just independent producers exchanging goods for their mutual benefit. But it is doubtful whether such an economy has ever existed. The nearest that may have come to it would have been in some of the early colonial settlements in North America. Some Greens wish to see a return to this kind of economy. We do not think that it is a viable alternative for modern society. Such a system would almost inevitably lead to capital accumulation and profit making-the definitive features of capitalism.

GODS AND GODDESSES

Gods and Goddesses have been depicted by many Indian Sociologists in different ways. Raja Ravi Verma of Thiruvananthpur depicted the images of different Gods like Krishna, Vishnu, Shiva, Ganpati, Gouri, Kali, etc. through oil colored paintings. Gods and Goddesses were depicted in various dignified postures. Some of the prints depicted the scenes from the epic stories. The pictures like Krishna dancing scenes of Heaven and Hell, etc. were used by the people during festivals for sacred purposes.

ETHNOGRAPHIC ACCOUNTS

Sociologists attempted in numerous ways to study the details of epics like Mahabharata. One such study by Srinivas was named as 'Religion and Society among the Coorgs of South India'. In this study various social groups like family, caste and village, their ceremonies and festivals were covered. The process of Sanskritisation of rituals and behaviour was adopted by lower group and the contextual references defined the practices adopted by priests. According to Srinivas, these medium of studies were adopted by lower groups to remain connected to pure activities and discard the impure ones.

Marriott introduced the concept universalisation to the process through which religion gets wider acceptance which incorporated greater civilisation. According to Poet Tulsidas, the subject refers to a classical combination according to the prescribed procedure.

Different groups are classified on the basis of festivals and duties. These are:

- The All India
- Peninsular or Regional
- The Local Spread

Some famous institutions and centres have gained people's attention. These are:

- Sai Baba
- Vaishno Devi
- Santoshi Mata
- Society for Krishna Consciousness
- Gayatri Peeth

SELF-ASSESSMENT QUESTIONS

Q. 1. Do you think that complex religious like Hinduism have any place for totemic thinking?

Ans. In India, cows were treated as gods by the worship of this special status does have its historical evolution, its evolution with the Hindu in India is closely related to the status of the ups and downs; Not only that, the Indians love animal behaviour in human society There is also the history of the development track to test, and its relationship with the primitive religion is not taboo random slaughter of animals are similar. By comparison with the original animal totems, you can see the idol worship of animals across time and space, it does not with the evolution of modern civilization and the development of market economy disappear, in today's society there are still a stage of its activities. After all, a few million years, animals and people to coexist in a planet, the future should also be the case, how humans and animals live in harmony this topic worth thinking about.

The totemic thinking of tribal groups is related to the spirits of plants and animals. Those who believe in totemism would respect totem animal, will not harm it, organize functions by painting their faces and bodies.

Hinduism on the other hand is a complex religion with its own set of myths and rules. Hinduism also believes in not harming an animal or plant. Totemic thinking is a belief of a primitive society and of the tribes who were illiterate.

Q. 2. Do many Gods and Goddesses indicate that the religion is polytheistic not monotheistic?

Ans. Hinduism is a decidedly theistic religion; the difficulty lies in determining whether it is a polytheistic, pantheistic, or perhaps even monotheistic religion. It should be noted at the outset, however, that this is chiefly a western difficulty: the Indian mind is much more inclined to regard divergent views as complementary rather than competing. The Hindu Gods Shiva, Parvati and Ganesh.

Supporting a view of Hinduism as a polytheistic religion is the great pantheon of Hindu gods. The oldest and most sacred texts, the Vedas, are chiefly concerned with mythologies and rituals related to a number of deities, most of which are identified with aspects of the natural world. The gods of modern Hinduism include the chief gods Shiva, Vishnu and the Mother Goddess Shakti as well as a myriad of local community Gods.

Some eastern religions, notably Vaishava, Saiva, Sikhism, and some Hindu sects, tend to promote the omnipotence of one particular god within the pantheon, and thus display some monotheistic characteristics. Monotheism arose in opposition to polytheism, the belief in many gods. Monism, or non-dualism between the physical and the spiritual, presupposes unity but deemphasizes personal monotheism.
